humans and security systems lead to cybercrime . The banking, credit card, health, military, and manufacturing sectors are frequent targets of cybercriminals . If the cost of a data breach is $20 to $100 per record , the cost of a successful fraud and theft is far higher . It is estimated that cybercrime costs the global economy $445 billion per year . The world's most recognizable and invasive cyber threats include viruses, denial-of-service attacks, spyware, phishing scams, spam, and fake websites . The risk posed by these cyberthreats is increasing due to attacks on Internet infrastructure, such as wireless and fiber-optic networks, the power grid, and other utilities . These cyberthreats are further hampered by security systems' susceptibility to design flaws and intentional malfunctions. Security software, computer hardware, and IT administrators are frequently the weakest link in the chain of cyberdefense .
