Just given Download link Why are people trying to push a Eurozone breakup One of the odd things about the Eurozone is that despite the fact that many people are calling for the demise of the euro, very few people seem to actually think that a "break up" of the Eurozone would be a good thing. But what exactly is so bad about the Eurozone? The basics are that a currency union limits the ability of economies and people to respond to change in ways that may be useful to them. The basic problem that affects the euro is that it is one of the oldest currencies in the world and it has not had sufficient adjustment to the forces around it to achieve the things that are necessary for a modern currency to work. The basic problem with a currency is that it's as important as other parts of the economy; if it's not working properly it gets tarnished in the minds of people and people tend to avoid it. This is because of the underlying belief that the currencies of any economy is an expression of the underlying economic health of that economy. For example, if a country trades its excess with its neighbors because it's over-traded and the currency is weak in the exchange rate, people will start trading within that country, which is what is called a "confidence trade." If the currency is weak then the economy is weak and people are afraid that they won't be able to exchange their cash for
