The complete nucleotide sequences of parvovirus type 2 (BPV2) isolates from pigs obtained over a period of three years were determined and compared with those of other BPV2 strains. The results demonstrated that strains isolated over the three years harboured only a single nucleotide variation in the genomes, despite the fact that the strains were separated by geographical distribution (North America, Europe, and Africa) and time period (1981-1985 and 1986-1990). Comparison of the proteins encoded by the two groups of viruses revealed no apparent differences in the sizes or sequences of the proteins. The data obtained suggest that the isolates of BPV2 identified in the present study have been circulating for many years in pigs and that the most of them are potentially zoonotic, although this remains to be proven.

Q: What happened to the note? In Oracle's first movie where they transition to the online world, a kid goes to the post office and takes a letter. He finds another note and gives it to the woman at the door who looks very similar to what's in the picture below. What's the name of the note shown below?

A: Probably just a short form of "Gift" i.e. Gift from JN to JN (probably an heiress of a wealthy family). The woman with the letter at the door looks very similar to what's shown (i.e. Mrs. Stephens, the lioness of the house, looking a bit like the woman with the letter) In the movie, the boy takes the letter to his father who is writing a letter too. He takes the letter and gives it to
