You'll start by watching the opening. The opening sets the scene and establishes the characters and their roles in the story. It's funny, emotional, dramatic and I have to say it's very impressive. They really managed to hit the mark there. The story of this anime is set in a future where humans and robots coexist, their interaction is ever-changing. One of the more entertaining things about this anime is the various different, but similar, robot designs that the characters use. All of them can be rather intimidating at first, but they become rather cute as the story progresses. It's a sci-fi anime that you can easily relate to and enjoy. Just like humans, they have problems, dreams and aspirations. Unlike humans, these robots are something more than just a machine. Yes, they are mechanical and it's made that way on purpose but it's clear that these robots are more than just a machine. One thing I noticed about this anime is that it was extremely well put together. The animation was stunning and the character designs were fantastic. The backgrounds and scenery really seemed to make the world come to life. You could really feel that this anime was well crafted, not a cheap anime that was produced by a bunch of disjointed designers. The music was another thing that I really enjoyed. It was rich and full of emotion. While the anime was relatively light, the music seemed to provide the lead and make it very dramatic and a little depressing. It was a very interesting balance between the drama and comedy. This anime is a great example of a story-driven anime. It doesn't jump from one scene to the next and doesn't waste time. It certainly has its slower moments, but it really pulls you in and makes the time go by quickly. The characters are all very likeable and once you meet them, you really want to see what happens next. This

I have a custom UserControl that is used to hold some configuration properties that are used as a wrapper for a section of the application. I am trying to create a global message centre, that handles different notifications and displays them to the user in a message box. When displaying a message, the original containing container should be shown and the message should also be aligned within that container. It is fine if I use the Form itself as the container as I can simply grab the parent form, however I want to avoid using the form if possible. I am trying to access the container that the UserControl is in and trying to access this by calling: this.Parent.Controls.Cast 2d92ce491b
