I am looking for the best solution and the fastest. var myObject={"Acc":[{"d":"10","d2":"23"}, {"d":"10","d2":"23"}, {"d":"10","d2":"23"}, {"d":"10","d2":"23"}, {"d":"10","d2":"23"}]} I want to get this kind of output: var myArr = [{"d":"10","d2":"23"}]; A: If you have control over the JSON then you can use $.map() instead of.forEach(), like this: var myObject= {"Acc":[{"d":"10","d2":"23"}, {"d":"10","d2":"23"}, {"d":"10","d2":"23"}, {"d":"10","d2":"23"}]} var newArr = $.map(myObject, function(entry) { return { key: entry.d, value: entry.d2 }; }); console.log(newArr); The value of pretransplant prophylactic antibiotic treatment for recipients of living donor transplants. Prophylactic antibiotic treatment is recommended to recipients of living donor transplants to prevent wound infection. We have performed this study to assess the value of such treatment. Between January 2000 and June 2001, prophylactic antibiotics were administered to 23 children who received living donor transplants of a kidney, liver, heart, or a multivisceral transplant. The results of pretransplant prophylactic antibiotic treatment and those of postsurgical wound infections were compared. Prophylactic antibiotic treatment was started on the day of transplantation. The administration period of prophylactic antibiotic treatment ranged from 5 to 12 days. In 11 cases (47.8%), a significant infection did not develop in the wounds and only one wound infection was observed. The blood cultures were sterile in 15 cases (65.2%) and were positive in 8 cases (34.8%) during the prophylactic antibiotic treatment period. In contrast, 5 cases (21.7%) developed wound infections and blood 2d92ce491b
