Vitreous replacement of the macular hole with Healon.

The current study evaluated the effectiveness of vitreous replacement of the macular hole with Healon. The study group consisted of 12 eyes of 12 patients with macular hole. After the hole was completed by anterior vitrectomy with a gas tamponade (23%C(2)SO(2), N(2)O, or air), the holes were completely filled with Healon, which was then left in place for 3 months. During the postoperative follow-up, the visual acuity, fundal appearance, and macular hole size were evaluated. Furthermore, axial computed tomography (CT) and magnetic resonance (MR) images were obtained in 3 cases. After surgery, the hole was completely closed in 10 cases. In two cases, a large, circular, and high-density area developed in the macular area on the fundus. The two patients gained 3 and 5 lines of the best corrected visual acuity, respectively. The remaining 10 patients had no change in visual acuity. Axial CT and MR images demonstrated that the Healon filled the entire macular area, and no hole was seen in the center. Vitreous replacement with Healon is a new surgical method for the management of idiopathic macular hole. This method may be a useful technique for the surgical treatment of macular holes. A former child soldier who killed one of the members of the notorious Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) in 2015 has been released from detention following a $1m (£775,200) payment by LRA leader Joseph Kony. The payment by the LRA, which was initially reported by AP news agency in Uganda, is intended to help one of the two remaining rebels, Philip Aguer, to escape a government-imposed Internationally Protected Persons (IPPs) programme. Aguer, a former fighter, was part of a group of combatants when he killed Mathias Kajwang, an LRA member in a battle that broke out
