It seems that the jpantek x12 has a pnp and not an I2C device, only the rs-232 device. TJ-> i just want to use the new Intel Broadwell for development, the i7 is only for production servers xamithan: I have no idea 'i2c-dev'. OerHeks: yes, I've been reading through the ICL changes to kernel for 4.5 and it sounds like their HSW 82590 SCSI device has changed to ID 0d12:0001 OerHeks: and a very bad idea to re-use a configuration file for USB and I2C OerHeks: this is a PCI SCSI adapter rather than on-chip SCSI heh i2c-dev is a device driver it might have some options TJ-, yes, i know, i can not believe that, i hope there is some workaround xamithan: see: OerHeks: for the USB driver you can set up a new configuration file using "sudo dpkg-reconfigure linux-image-4.5.0-040500rc7" OerHeks: that will allow you to re-add that device driver ah, gotcha thx OerHeks: although if the I2C driver is for I2C itself rather than a device it's a bit different there is no workaround for the 82590 device, as it is not even a acpi device, or something similiar. help OerHeks: this PCI device has been re-designed and it has its own I2C/SPI/SCSI commands that allow you to directly access it and issue SCSI commands to it TJ-, yes, i read about that. So, just remove the USB and i2c drivers from the kernel?
