Not such a big fan of this but I was curious if you could get your computer to run at its highest possible speed. As this problem has been going on for a few days I think I need a little help I have a P4 and in the bios there is the option of maxram, speedstep and performance mode In the setup of the setup i can only change maxram Is there any other way of changing the speed of my computer and is there any issues that may arise when doing so? You have to manually edit the P1 timings of your CPU. The site has several instructions on how to do this but I can't get it to work. You need a tool called the 'PoweRcorder' for this to be properly done. I have a P4 and in the bios there is the option of maxram, speedstep and performance mode In the setup of the setup i can only change maxram Is there any other way of changing the speed of my computer and is there any issues that may arise when doing so? Any problems by using that app to make your cpu run at its highest possible speed?Sonographic appearance of the brain in neonates with congenital heart disease. RapidEXE - Create EXE applications in under a minute Features:

Automatically create packed EXE applications (doesn't mess with Windows) Runs in Windows

Vista/7/8 Compiles and executes scripts containing VBScript, VB6, and Visual Basic 6, VBA, and F#

Handles mouse/keyboard inputs

Native methods for support of more than 18 languages (see here for a full list of languages) Supported for 32bit, 64bit To keep things simple, the project is based on a very user-friendly interface: Creates an EXE file in under 5 seconds Compiles without a hitch No additional software required No registry modifications No program files are created And what is the main difference between this app and any other EXE builder you've used? Easy! RapidEXE simply manages to compile your created scripts, without messing with the registry, the files or the menus. And do not forget that RapidEXE is compatible with nearly all versions of Microsoft Visual Basic and Visual Basic 6, and those of you that may use Microsoft F#.

Conversely, any type of scripting and programming language that is supported is able to be compiled into an executable. Therefore, this is the only app in this list that can handle all the popular scripting languages and variants: VBS or VBScript VB6 or Visual Basic 6 VB4 or Visual Basic 4 VBScript.NET VBJS or VBScript.NET Script – VBScript is the de facto scripting language for Internet Explorer F# Vba So my advice? Buy it and create something interesting! And as an added bonus I would like to mention that you don't have to buy RapidEXE as a full program, as you can download the EXE file right here. RapidEXE link P.S. A few minutes later, in order to help you get this app as fast as possible, I've also made it available as a standalone setup. Give it a try! A: A5 Wrapper is for both VB and VBS, and can be used to create EXE's. A5 Wrapper is a utility that simplifies the process of creating and deploying Windows and Office based applications. RapidEXE is a Windows-based software that supports *numerous programming languages. It allows you to create EXE files from your web scripts, or even have their source codes converted to program, and then compiled into EXE files. RapidEXE has in-built support for several programming languages, including Visual Basic, HTML, ASP, JSP, JAVA, Perl and PHP, as well as other types of scripting languages. It's also a suitable tool to create EXE files for Windows Help Desk applications, software tools, and Web help pages. RapidEXE was first published in 2004 by Star2k Tech Ltd., a UKbased company that operates a site called RapidExe.com. RapidEXE is licensed as Freeware for personal use. RapidEXE is a standalone program, and doesn't rely on any additional components. It works through the use of internal commands, which are enclosed in quotation marks, such as "CD", "RDP", "GOTO", "IFC", "REX" and "SLE", among others. At the moment, the program is in a developmental phase and there are no definitive specifications, or a pre-release version available for download. RapidEXE was found in a number of Internet-based software libraries in 2011. Q: CakePHP
