A: The sentence says, that the resistor in the formula can be switched between 0Ω and any value we want by controlling the signal of the switch. Or, we could view it in'mathematical way': "Given two resistors R_0 and R_1 in parallel with a switch. The total resistance of the system is determined by the switch. Set $R_0=0$. The switch is connected to the V of our two batteries." We could say: "We have an infinite amount of batteries, where all batteries have a voltage of $+1 \text{ V}$. We connect them to a resistor." And with this, we could say: "we connect the switch to $R_0=0$, so we have zero resistance." Q: How to use Multiply transpose? I would like to create a multiplication table with some data from a data table, but i can't seem to make it work. This is the data with products: data: = k 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 as you can see, the values form an 'addition table' with the number in front of it.
