A: The error message looks like a product key issue. I have never seen this. Can you try to download a trial version of Inventor Professional 2015 and see if that works? About your question: They are unable to save any part or drawing withing Inventor 2015, or save. It's Autodesk Inventor Professional 2015 64bit edition. It looks like the 64bit version of Inventor Professional 2015 does not support 32bit drawings. However, you can save 32bit drawings and parts in XMMATE 32bit, but you need XMMATE installed to do this. Q: Javascript's ToNumber returning a specific value for NaN EDIT: Fixed code formatting I'm passing a string value (which is potentially NaN) to a method which will always return a number. The problem I'm running into is that ToNumber seems to be returning a value for NaN. I'm positive that my string value is actually NaN, and not the parseFloat result. >>> NaN Could someone tell me what I'm doing wrong here? Here's a fiddle and code. var x = document.getElementById('x'); var y = document.getElementById('y'); x.addEventListener('input', function() { y.textContent = parseFloat(x.value).toFixed(2); }); A: Here's a working example. var x = document.getElementById('x'); var y = document.getElementById('y'); x.addEventListener('input', function() { y.textContent = isNaN(parseFloat(x.value)) ? x.value : parseFloat(x.value).toFixed(2); }); The reason why you can't use x.value in your example is because it's a string, and so both the parseFloat and parseFloat.toNumber functions are trying to parse and return the content of the string rather than the number it is intended to represent. In my example, isNaN is just checking to see if what we have is actually a NaN, and if it is then return the value, otherwise return what parseFloat.toNumber returns. #define IDS_APPLY 1cb139a0ed
