AD Support Tools [Updated]

The management of user accounts and computer accounts in Active Directory, and Active Directory objects, is a common function that many users will often need to complete. AD Support Tools was developed to simplify the task of managing these types of accounts and to generate report documents to aid in the support of each user's computer. It is especially useful when using the account management functionality of the Windows 2000 operating system to manage systems that are not yet 2003-compliant. Some of the more common tasks that AD Support Tools can be used to accomplish include:

- Display user accounts based on Group Membership (more powerful than group management in Windows 2000). This capability can also be used to find stale accounts (those who have not logged in for over x-days).
- Display computer accounts based on Group Membership (more powerful than group management in Windows 2000). This capability can also be used to find stale accounts.
- Identify stale accounts (based on a configuration driven comparison of last login dates, date created, and date modified).
- Display a list of Delegators and Delegates of an account
- Cleanup attributes (truncate audit failures and monitor logins, change the default setting in active directory for birthday dates for new user accounts, change default account settings, and create a bounce account if no emails are received).
- Display a list of accounts by group membership (more powerful than group management in Windows 2000).
- Display a list of accounts by Group membership. (more powerful than group management in Windows 2000).

What's New in the AD Support Tools?

Active Directory Support Tools was written as a method of using some commonly used queries on the AD, and a front-end for executing the queries and, in turn, retrieving the data as an easy-to-process format. AD Support Tools is a free tool for Unix-based systems. It was developed using the PHP programming language. The rumour surfaced from an anonymous source, who went by the name of "reliable source," or possibly "scofflaw," on NeoGAF (they went unidentified). The exact date that the Switch HD is for release was unknown, as "mid-2019" was the estimate given. Well, we just got official word from Nintendo (via Nintendo Everything), and it appears the Nintendo Switch HD is indeed in production at the Nintendo Treehouse. The Nintendo Switch HD The so-called "Nintendo Switch HD" is a new 1080p enhanced 2D design of the Nintendo Switch, similar to the 3DS. The rumor on the NeoGAF claims the Nintendo Switch HD was in the works for years prior to the Switch's unveiling. It was originally believed that the new console would be a big departure from what we've seen from Nintendo in the past. But, that couldn't be further from the truth. Just compare the first Nintendo Switch for the 3DS to the current Nintendo Switch for the Switch, and you can see that the company hasn't made any radical changes to the console. One big change on this new console, however, is the fact that it will be backwards compatible with the Nintendo Switch library. You'll still be able to play on the Nintendo Switch HD, but you can also play all the NES, GameCube, Wii, and Nintendo 3DS games. It's like having one console with two screens. But, if you're still confused about the Nintendo Switch HD, why not take a look at the images below.
