The study objective was to present the development and psychometric properties of a new instrument for nutritional assessment of patients with complex care needs (PONS). A cross-sectional design was used, with data collection performed in hospital and home care patients. The study sample included 734 patients aged 18-90 years. Eight healthcare professionals participated in the study to evaluate face and content validity, the first version of the questionnaire (PONS-V1), inter-rater reliability and internal consistency. The final version (PONS-V2) was presented to a sample of 209 patients, who were asked to complete the questionnaire, and the internal consistency was calculated. Exploratory and confirmatory factor analyses were used to test the construct validity. The same professionals completed the version, and inter-rater reliability was calculated. The PONS showed adequate construct validity and internal consistency. The mean total score was 32.7 (SD = 13.0), with a range from 0-64 points. All items and domains showed internal consistency (Cronbach's alpha = 0.70-0.98), with a variance coefficient of between 0.33 and 0.92.
