Our online store has been receiving a lot of requests for orders for skeletons, and people wanting to find out how to make them. For this first post, we have a fun tutorial for a 6-inch tin man. He uses an oven-safe cookie cutter, and has a removable and washable plastic eye. You can find this handy man anywhere that sells Halloween decorations. There is also an instruction manual in the package that comes with the kit. I'll explain how to make the eye later on. If you don't want to try this particular project, I've got another tutorial for you as well. It's the same recipe for the tin man, but this time the head is made from a hollow pumpkin. Step One: Place the cookie cutter inside the plastic of your mold. Don't worry about the plastic sticking to the cookie cutter. The outer edges of the plastic will be quite thick, and you just want to be sure that the cookie cutter fits inside. If you have a new mold, you may need to flip it over. Step Two: Melt the white chocolate. Put it in a microwave-safe bowl, and heat on high for 30 seconds. If you're using the microwave, it should be at a level that the bowl is just half full. If you don't have a microwave, heat the bowl in a saucepan of boiling water for about a minute, stirring occasionally. Scrape the bowl, and place the chocolate in the freezer to harden. Step Three: Combine the white chocolate and the vegetable oil in a bowl. Make sure that you stir well. If you stir too slowly, the oil will separate. If that happens, just stir until the chocolate is melted and smooth, and then chill it in the freezer. After this is hard, start in with the pumpkin. Using a melon baller, cut away the rind from the pumpkin. Make sure you remove enough so that the pumpkin is just sitting on the bottom of the mold. Fill the cavity of the pumpkin with the chocolate mixture. You can even make it look a little more realistic by placing some small lumps of white chocolate on the top
