Wireless Radios can be used to connect a computer to a wireless network and thus obtain a connection to the internet or to private networks within a building. These wireless network adapters (WNAs) can be built into the motherboard of the computer, or as separate devices that plug into the computer via a PCI, PCI-E, or USB slot. However, the most common type of WNA for home users and small businesses is the wireless access point. Wireless access point devices are stand-alone devices with a built-in wireless interface and an Ethernet port so that they can be connected to an ethernet-enabled network router. The WNA creates a wireless local area network (WLAN) on the premises.
