Distantv activation codeA federal appeals court ruled Monday that the government can continue to require health care companies to report insurance payment data even though the Obama administration had changed the rules after President Donald Trump's election. A three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit Court upheld a lower-court decision allowing the disclosure requirement to continue. The panel said that Health and Human Services could not have violated the Administrative Procedures Act, which requires federal agencies to follow a process established in rules and regulations, when it finalized the new rules at the end of 2017, according to a ruling by U.S. Circuit Judge Judith Rogers. "The agency has offered a reasoned explanation for how it implemented the rule in a manner that does not violate its statutory obligations," Rogers wrote. "We lack the power to substitute our judgment for that of the agency and direct the agency to follow a different path." The appeals court ruled that the rules as finalized by the Department of Health and Human Services in December 2017 are valid. In October 2017, Republican President Donald Trump called on the Justice Department to ask for a court's review of the regulations, but the request was denied. READ MORE: Trump calls for continued release of Obamacare data Democrats in Congress, who control the House of Representatives, passed legislation in July 2017 to remove the Obamacare mandate. The law required businesses and health insurance plans to report certain financial data starting in 2015. Before then, the administration had argued that the Obama-era rule was enacted through a backdoor process, without proper notification to Congress and in contravention of Trump's campaign pledges to end the law, the appeals court ruled.
