**Colorimeters/Spectrophotometers** A colorimeter is similar to a scanner in that it reads color values. However, a scanner is able to convert the color values into color-specific printing devices, such as desktop and proofing inkjet printers. A colorimeter can only make recommendations. For example, some colorimeters can spot the difference between a red and blue shade of paper, but they can't tell you the best paper for a particular project. A spectrophotometer is similar to a colorimeter in that it reads color values; however, it does so in both visible and ultraviolet wavelengths.

Users who are familiar with Photoshop will find some changes while using Photoshop Elements. For example, some of the buttons are rearranged or functionality has changed. However, most features work the same way, and you can continue to use Photoshop Elements as you use Photoshop. This tutorial has been written for Photoshop Elements 10, but it can be used with Photoshop Elements 11 as well.

Interface Changes The interface has been made simpler as shown in the screenshot below. Each group of options is separated with tabs. Also, there is a new Collections view that is shown in the screenshot below.

Options The main interface includes options and tabs. You can enable and disable features or set options like layer properties, saturation, sharpness, etc. You can also change your shortcut keys, automatically sort your files, and so on.

Tab Names The tabs have been renamed to make them easier to use. The new tab names are shown in the screenshot below.

Layers in the Organizer The Organizer displays layers organized by date and number. You can click the group name to show the layers that belong to it.

Tagging Layers You can name and organize layers using a group. To do so, you can select a group by clicking on the group name on the bottom left and then click on one of the group names or add another group below it. You can add tags in the same way. The group name and layer name will be made into tags automatically and moved to the Tags section.

Layer Modes Use the Layer Modes to make your layers visible or invisible. All layers have layer modes. If you add a layer, you can see the layer mode in the bottom bar.

Layer Modes Layers can be shown or hidden in the Layers window and Elements Organizer. You can select a layer and click on the visibility icon on the top toolbar to toggle visibility. You can also turn layers visible or invisible quickly in Photoshop Elements. To do so, click Layer ► Visibility or hit Ctrl+D, and then adjust the layer in the Layers window.

New Collections View Elements Organizer

Young children's comprehension of false beliefs in nonverbal communicative events. Sixteen young children ( $M = 3.8$  yr., range = 1.9-4.9) were asked to judge whether a number of nonverbal events communicated another person's belief or not. In 4 conditions, an event was set up for a belief-receiver to observe and the belief-sender either told him (and then the receiver believed this), or not. In the second of these, the belief-sender gave the belief-receiver one of 3 balls to play with when he left. Children judged to have received the ball understood that the belief-sender believed that the belief-receiver would play with it. In contrast, children did not learn when a belief-sender gave a ball to a belief-receiver when the belief-sender told the belief-receiver to throw it away. These findings suggest that preschoolers may understand that a communicative event communicates the belief of a communicator without necessarily being able to understand the communicative intentions of the communicator.

A national survey of clinical practice patterns and perceptions of methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus aureus management among North American pediatricians. Early recognition and targeted therapy for methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) is critical to decreasing morbidity and mortality. A national Web-based survey of pediatricians regarding MRSA was conducted to determine their current MRSA management practices and attitudes regarding MRSA. Ninety-six percent (472/497) of US pediatricians responded, representing a survey response rate of 19%. Seventy-eight percent of respondents treat pediatric patients with nasal colonization with MRSA at entry, while 46% screen hospitalized patients for MRSA. A total of 72% to 87% of respondents recommended admission of MRSA-colonized patients if they have not demonstrated clinical improvement in 48 hours. Respondents do not consistently recommend admission of MRSA-colonized patients with community-acquired MRSA if they have clinical improvement in 72 hours, suggesting that whether community-acquired cases are treated in the outpatient setting varies by institution and geographic region. Although 72% of respondents treat patients with community-acquired MRSA, only 28% treat patients with health care-associated MRSA. Pediatricians do not consistently recommend immediate admission or discontinuation of therapy for MRSA-colonized outpatients, further emphasizing the need for an aggressive intervention to
