Q: What is the default zoom level for a Google Map? Here's the situation... I'm using What I've noticed is if I put my marker at a high zoom level and then resize the browser to a smaller width, the marker size changes but it's not in proportion to the smaller width. That is, the marker is the same size it was when at the maximum zoom level, I just don't see the entire marker within the browser. I'm fairly certain the reason for this is that the zoom level was set to something like 17 rather than what I want which is that the marker sizes at the max zoom level are used when it comes to zoom. My question is: How can I achieve what I want, is there a parameter I need to set in order to do this? A: The zoom level refers to how many map areas are in your map (or near your map). So if you're going from a 12 zoom level to a 10 zoom level, the ratio is 1:2. It's not a specific marker scale, rather a ratio. What you want would be a 4 zoom level setting. So if you're going from 12 to 10, it will be (12*2) / 10 = 3 For 20 to 18 would be (20*2) / 18 = 2.3 So in general, the ratio is zoom_level/zoom_level*2. A: Unless you have customised the URL where you're using the Marker Clusterer, you can see which map_data it's using by looking at the "markers" parameter in the URL. If there are two markers there for example, the distance between them will be 20 pixels. You can alter the zoom level using the "zoom" parameter, but you'll probably need to change it from the maximum zoom level that you're not seeing. A: If you're embedding the map using JavaScript, it's probably as simple as Google Maps API's default option: zoom = 16; To fix the issue you've noted, set the maxZoom value in the GMap2 object to something lower than the highest zoom that you're not seeing (possibly as

o-peptic ulcer. Our patient was taken to the operating room and underwent laparoscopic cholecystectomy as planned. The intraoperative finding revealed a gallbladder without thickened wall, stone, or perforation. We performed intraoperative cholangiography to rule out the possibility of an acute cholecystitis. We found no abnormality of bile duct. However, after surgery, serum amylase and lipase remained elevated. We considered the possibility that the cause of prolonged elevation of amylase and lipase may be hepatic dysfunction due to a possible gallbladder haematoma or infarction. A CT scan of the liver performed on postoperative day 5 revealed a subcapsular hematoma in the left hepatic lobe. The current management of the patient was conservative treatment. Abdominal ultrasound and CT scans were performed every 5 days until the patient was discharged from the hospital. CT scans showed that the subcapsular hematoma of the liver had spontaneously disappeared 10 days after the initial CT scan. However, the patient's amylase and lipase levels remained elevated until the normalization of their serum levels 18 days postoperatively. Discussion ========== Although the presence of haemorrhage in the gallbladder has been reported to be as high as 35% \[[@B2]\], most patients with such conditions present with acute upper abdominal pain \[[@B4]\]. In these patients, bleeding from the gallbladder may be induced by the disruption of the wall of a preexisting gallbladder haematoma caused by chronic cholecystitis, blunt trauma, or surgery \[[@B5]\]. In the present case, the risk factors for haemorrhage were history of cholecystectomy, long operation time and high intraoperative bleeding. Gallbladder haematoma is treated conservatively for several days \[[@B3]\]. However, the outcome of patients with gallbladder haematoma is associated with the severity of gallbladder disease and the severity of the intraoperative bleeding \[[@B5]\]. Most patients with gallbladder haematoma have a good prognosis \[[@B6]\], but patients with massive haemorrhage and perforation have poor prognosis \[[@B7]\]. Our patient had an
