“HyperMotion technology is a brand new, cutting-edge artificial intelligence feature,” said Aleksander Kurtschnauser, Senior Producer, FIFA. “The data from real-life players has been used by the development team to capture their movements, their approach to the game, and most importantly, their unpredictability during play. This massively enhances the realism and challenge of playing the game.” Along with the introduction of motion capture-based gameplay and FIFA’s dedication to real-life football, players will experience Real Player Motion Technology, which is a brand-new suite of game-changing technologies that increase the degree of realism and immersion, including First Touch Intelligence, Player Impact Engine, Player Positioning, Player Physical Attribute, and Player Trajectory and Trajectory Retaining. The technologies will vary from team to team and from player to player, depending on the player’s position, the situation and the type of movement. For example, a defender’s Pass and Move Trajectory Adjustment technology will have a different effect on a winger’s movement than it does on a defender. The goal of these technologies is to create a gameplay experience that brings the reality of real-life football to life in FIFA 22. “The goal of Real Player Motion Technology is to capture the feeling of first-person football in a way that has never been done before,” said Ian Howe, Senior Manager of Real Player Motion Technology. “The technologies that we have developed are unique and first-of-their-kind, from the first touch to player movement to Player Trajectory and Trajectory Retaining. This technology provides a boost to many areas of gameplay and is a major step forward in the development of FIFA.” FIFA 22 will also introduce Dynamic Free Kicks, Dynamic Midfielders, and Dynamic Substitutions. The three new features will heighten the realistic feel of player substitution by applying a number of variations in player movements, player style, and the way players are substituted in the game. In addition to Dynamic Free Kicks, Dynamic Midfielders, and Dynamic Substitutions, FIFA 22 introduces Golden Boot Radar, which makes it possible for players to have eyes on the ball for virtually the whole duration of the match. “Golden Boot Radar is a cutting-edge technology that shows all players who are close enough to

GAMEPLAY FIFA 19 Building upon the explosive speed of FIFA 18, this year’s game boasts a number of gameplay advancements and real-world player development. PITCH and MOTION MODE have been significantly improved with more responsiveness, speed and accuracy to further enhance the overall game experience. Ball physics and AI enhancements such as heading, shooting and defending are also introduced. Goalkeepers can now recover back to their feet and their presentation has been improved, along with better animations. Skill moves such as Free kicks, Overheads, Corner kicks and Set Pieces provide an additional layer of unpredictability. The ability to dribble through multiple opponents seamlessly with a new Free Kick Angle control and increased dribble velocity allows players to dance around the pitch and pull off thrilling tricks, with more realistic ball contact and faster responsiveness. Recovery Full-backs now have the option to push up higher in defence to recover and, at the same time, remain defensive. This minimises the need for markers to protect these players. Personal fouls Changes to fouls and spot-kicks have enhanced the game experience and are made from close to the player’s position. With standard fouls, players receive yellow cards after multiple fouls and are ejected from the game if they score an extra-time or injury time penalty, while players would receive a red card during regular time.
