A: This is answered in the comments, but I have more info for you so I'm writing it here. The link you posted does not seem to be a valid URL, since it is not a valid IP address, and the URL you posted does not have the in front of it.

Just for kicks, I tried to see the contents of the file you uploaded.

Unfortunately, for those interested, the file is a browser exploit attachment, and not very well written. Are you sure the URL you posted in your post was valid? As a note, I have also found a few links elsewhere on the Internet, related to the same thing, but they seem to have missing parts.

Q: Django filter between two dates I have this line on my model: `birth_date = models.DateField(unique=True)` And I have this filter: `def`

`birth_date_exists(self): user_birth_date = self.user.birth_date return UserProfile.objects.filter(birth_date__gte=user_birth_date).exists()` I want to get a user profile who are active between a range of birth dates.

A: You can add a `where()` clause to your query: `def birth_date_exists(self): return self.user.birth_date >= self.date1 and self.user.birth_date`

Q: Unable to access router's DNS settings I have a brand new Raspberri Pi 2 and I'm trying to configure it as a server. I'm very new to it and I tried to follow a guide I found on the web. I was able to install the Pi but when I tried to change the DNS settings with `Raspi-config` I can only choose a static IP or a host-name. If I select the DHCP option, the OS seems to go into some sort of strange loop and reboots itself. The problem is that I can't make any change in the network settings as I can't access to the router's DNS configuration. I've tried by going into the web interface (
