The technology was developed in collaboration with Motion Remote, a pioneering UK-based motion capture tech company, which has worked with world class players such as Gerard Piqué, Kevin De Bruyne and Sergio Ramos. HyperMotion allows FIFA 22 players to execute soccer moves and behaviors that would be virtually impossible without the technology. HyperMotion players will have increased ball speed and acceleration, as well as greater ball control that will help them achieve more easily what only a small number of players have ever achieved with the game. The technology will also allow players to dribble faster, make more precise runs, and combine effectively with their teammates. FIFA 22 also debuts some of the game's most visually advanced stadiums including Reims, Maracana, Stade Ligue 1, Vicarage Road, the Allianz Arena, Old Trafford, Soccer City and the Volksparkstadion. Starting in August, FIFA fans will have the opportunity to play a full match using the technology in the Official FIFA Mobile EA SPORTS Club, available on the App Store for iPhone, iPad and iPod touch, Google Play for Android devices, and the Windows Store for Windows 10. The first FIFA 22 players are set to take the field in the Club in mid-August, allowing them to go head to head with users in a real-life match. Two weeks later, fans can start their own challenge with the highly anticipated FIFA 22 Official League on iOS and Android devices. This platform allows players to compete in real-life matches against friends, earning rewards for their performances, while challenging themselves against the highest scores in each game mode. Developed in collaboration with Football First, the Official FIFA 22 League features real players from all over the world, including the likes of the likes of Ryan Giggs, Gonzalo Higuain, Thierry Henry, Marouane Fellaini, Wayne Rooney, Hugo Lloris, Jamie Vardy, Vincent Kompany, Mikel Arteta, and many more. FIFA 22 will be available for pre-purchase on the App Store for iPhone, iPad and iPod touch, Google Play for Android devices, and the Windows Store for Windows 10 on Aug. 20, giving gamers a chance to experience all new and enhanced gameplay features, as well as the new tournament called The Journey, before the September launch.="fig"}.
