5.2020.03.23.md5.Reliability of 18F-fluorodeoxyglucose positron emission tomography in follow-up of patients with high-risk neuroblastoma. To evaluate the reliability of integrated 18F-fluorodeoxyglucose positron emission tomography (FDG-PET) in the follow-up of patients with high-risk neuroblastoma. Thirty-six patients were studied with 18F-FDG PET at the time of relapse.

We calculated the lesion-to-background ratio (LBR) and the maximum standardized uptake value (SUVmax) for each lesion.

We correlated the PET results with other imaging modalities (MRI, bone scintigraphy, computerized tomography [CT], and magnetic resonance [MR]) and clinical outcome. The LBR of viable and necrotic lesions was higher on 18F-FDG PET than on other diagnostic modalities. Lesions detected by bone scintigraphy alone or lesions invisible on MRI by no means showed any elevated LBR. In all patients, 18F-FDG PET detected more lesions than any other diagnostic modality. 18F-FDG PET detected four lesions that were not detected by bone scintigraphy. Of these, 595f342e71
